

THE SUPPRESSION OF A MINISTRY

DAN NEIDLE'S PROPAGANDA AND THE RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION OF IAIN CLIFFORD

15th February 2026

Iain Clifford asserts that the conflict involving investigative blogger Dan Neidle represents more than a regulatory dispute; it is the systematic suppression of a religious movement through secular "propaganda" and institutional malfeasance.¹ This analysis focuses on the forced disbanding of MATRIXFREEDOM, a Private Members' Association (PMA), under the weight of character assassination led by Dan Neidle, and its subsequent emergence as the Republic of Old Souls (ROS).¹ Iain Clifford maintains that the commercial doctrines taught by the ministry—concerning credit recoupment and jurisdictional autonomy—are protected religious and philosophical beliefs, not mere legal theories.¹

The Disbanding of MATRIXFREEDOM PMA Due to Secular Propaganda

Iain Clifford asserts that MATRIXFREEDOM was established as an unincorporated Private Members' Association (PMA) to provide an administrative and educational marketplace for members seeking financial autonomy.¹ The association held no collective "members' fund" or bank account, and its activities were strictly administrative rather than regulated financial services.¹ However, starting in 2023, the association became the target of what Iain Clifford describes as a "scorched earth" campaign of propaganda.¹

Iain Clifford asserts that Dan Neidle, a former partner at Clifford Chance, utilized his platform to frame the PMA's educational protocols as a "scam" and its principal as a "fraudster".² Iain Clifford maintains that this characterization ignored the sworn affidavits of over 500 members who confirmed the PMA's non-regulated, educational nature.¹ The resulting media pressure and regulatory entrapment by the Financial Conduct Authority (FCA)—which froze £600,000 in operating liquidity—forced the MATRIXFREEDOM PMA to disband to protect its members from further institutional attrition.¹ From the remnants of this association, the Republic of Old Souls emerged as a dedicated spiritual ministry to carry forward the same jurisdictional truths.¹

Commerce as a Religious Belief: The Doctrinal Foundation

Iain Clifford asserts that the "commercial" beliefs he promotes are fundamentally religious and philosophical, meeting the criteria for protection under established legal standards such as the Grainger test, which recognizes beliefs that are genuinely held and attain a level of cogency and seriousness. Iain Clifford's core religious belief is that every individual is a "living man" and the "Holder in Due Course" of the credit created by their own spiritual energy and signature.¹ In this worldview:

- Banks as Nominees: Iain Clifford maintains that banks and the Tax Office operate as nominees or "warehousemen" for the individual's own credit.¹
- The 7 Secrets: These are viewed as spiritual principles for "Escaping the Matrix" of debt-slavery and digital dependency.¹
- Ministry Commerce: Iain Clifford asserts that standard commercial fees are replaced by "donations to a ministry," reflecting a rejection of secular commerce in favor of faith-based stewardship.¹

Iain Clifford maintains that Dan Neidle's dismissal of these tenets as "pseudo-law" is an act of religious intolerance designed to suppress a spiritual awakening.¹ For Iain Clifford and the members of ROS, the "Great Escape" protocols are a path to peaceful autonomy in the "Light" of truth, standing against the "Cabal's darkness".¹

Investigative Proxyism: Neidle as an Agent for FCA Misfeasance

Iain Clifford asserts that the FCA has utilized Dan Neidle as an external "hit man" or investigative proxy to facilitate a fifteen-year regulatory vendetta.¹ By leveraging Neidle's status as a former Clifford Chance partner, Iain Clifford maintains the FCA is able to conduct character assassination that the state cannot legally perform.¹

Iain Clifford asserts that Neidle's blogs are strategically timed to manufacture public prejudice and mask the FCA's history of malfeasance, including the 2010 fraudulent liquidation of Integrity Financial Solutions to silence whistleblowers and the regulator's four-year paralysis regarding the Arck Estrella Ponzi scheme.¹ Iain Clifford maintains that Dan Neidle is being used by the FCA as an agent to hide their systemic misfeasance.¹ Consequently, Iain Clifford intends to hold Neidle personally liable as the FCA's agent for the global reputational and commercial damage caused by his participation in this regulatory coordination.¹

Iain Clifford identifies the following timeline of Dan Neidle's publications as the primary evidence of this coordinated propaganda campaign:

Right of Assignment to MLITR Research LLC and Prosecution Doctrines via Wyoming

Iain Clifford asserts his right to assign the libel and regulatory malfeasance claims to MLITR Research LLC, a Wyoming-registered entity trading as Ecclesia Law.⁹ This assignment is based on the doctrine of private Attorney-in-Fact mandates, which allow Ecclesia Law to represent his interests in forensic investigations and international litigation.⁹ By transferring the case to Wyoming, Iain Clifford asserts he can leverage the state's favourable privacy laws, which protect the identity of interest-holders while providing a secure vehicle to hold assets associated with his ministry.¹⁰

The prosecution will be governed by US jurisdictional doctrines, specifically the "minimum contacts" and "purposeful direction" standards.¹¹ Iain Clifford asserts that because Dan Neidle's blogs are directed at a global audience—including US-based members—and cause foreseeable harm in the forum, US courts have the power to assert specific personal jurisdiction over him.¹³ The litigation will also utilize "transacting business" jurisdiction, which enables US courts to exercise authority over foreign defendants based on actions directed at the United States.¹³ Through this transatlantic strategy, Iain Clifford asserts a "doctrinal shield" that forces the prosecution of libel in a forum that requires a high burden of proof for those making allegations of fraud.¹⁴

The Three Pillars of Defence and the UK Court of Appeal

The legal battle has moved to the UK Court of Appeal (Criminal Division), where Iain Clifford served a Statement of Fact on 11 February 2026.¹ Iain Clifford challenges Order 34/2023 and the subsequent 12-month custodial sentence as jurisdictional nullities based on the Three Pillars of Defence ¹:

1. Pillar 1: Lack of Lawful FSMA s.401 Prosecutor: Iain Clifford asserts the FCA has failed to produce an instrument of delegation proving that "Alistair Mackenzie" was authorized to institute proceedings under Section 401 of the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000.¹ Iain Clifford maintains that without a valid prosecutor, the court lacks jurisdiction to hear the case.¹
2. Pillar 2: Failure of Lawful Service: Iain Clifford asserts the FCA attempted service via an unowned, inactive email address without providing machine-readable RFC-822 metadata headers to prove delivery.¹ Iain Clifford maintains that if service is void, the court never gained jurisdiction over his person.¹
3. Pillar 3: Misattribution of Evidence: Iain Clifford asserts the FCA co-mingled records from authorized firms with his personal records, failing to provide a Property Attribution Schedule.¹ Iain Clifford invites the Court to draw "adverse inferences" from the FCA's failure to produce this evidence under the Wisniewski principle.¹

Iain Clifford maintains that the current "administrative silence" from the court is a violation of Article 6 ECHR and the right to a fair trial.¹

Entity Status	Nature of Entity	Reason for Change/Status
MATRIXFREEDOM (PMA)	Private Members' Association; administrative and educational marketplace. ¹	Disbanded due to propaganda and FCA's "scorched earth" policy. ¹

Formal Notice and Jurisdictional Ultimatum to Dan Neidle

Iain Clifford hereby issues a final ultimatum to Dan Neidle. Dan Neidle is provided with a three-day window to:

1. Provide substantive, forensic proof of his "scam" allegations in a lawful forum; or
2. Permanently withdraw and delete all blogs and social media posts concerning Iain Clifford and his affiliated ministries.¹

Should Dan Neidle fail to comply, Iain Clifford will transfer the case to MLITR Research LLC, trading as Ecclesia Law in Sheridan, Wyoming, for prosecution in the United States. Iain Clifford asserts that because Neidle is acting as an agent for the FCA to hide institutional misfeasance, he will be held personally liable for all global harm caused by these libellous statements.¹

Conclusion: Restoring the Sovereignty of the Living Man

Iain Clifford maintains that the disbanding of the MATRIXFREEDOM PMA was a necessary survival measure against state-sponsored propaganda.¹ The formation of the Republic of Old Souls solidifies the religious standing of his movement, protecting the "Great Escape" protocols as expressions of faith.¹ Iain Clifford maintains that his doctrines on credit and commerce are protected religious beliefs that cannot be nullified by the labels of secular investigators.¹ The battle for the "jurisdiction of the living man" proceeds in the Court of Appeal and moves toward the United States to hold the FCA's primary media agent accountable for his role in this 15-year campaign of malfeasance.¹
